TO THE SALEM UM CHURCH COMMUNITY

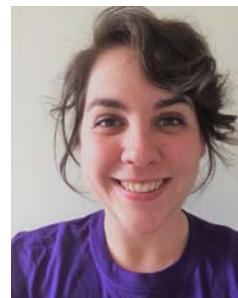

Rev. Dr. Sue Shorb-Sterling

September means another school year begins. And with this, we are blessed to have Jo Shonewolf returning to serve among us for a second year. Jo is a Masters of Divinity student at Wesley Theological Seminary. Salem is her Practice in Mission and Ministry site for two years. One gift that Jo brings is seeking ways to connect faith with science. Last spring she led a small group which explored this connection. Jo will offer this group again.

(See her statement below.) Along with leading this group, Jo will be leading us in worship, preaching once a month, and leading our youth group.

Salem welcomes you back, Jo!

Science, Religion, and Spirituality: An Intersection of Wonder

You've all by now likely heard me talk a little bit about wonder, that feeling that you get when you see something truly amazing or awesome. It's an emotion that religion and science hold in common. "The heavens declare the glory of God," writes the psalmist, and we who are Christians can attest to that sentiment. The glory of God can be seen in the world all around us and we join together in worship on Sunday mornings to celebrate that glory and all the other ways God's love, grace, and wonderful creation break into our lives during the week. Wonder at and care of creation are common threads throughout many of the world's religions.

Science often grows out of wonder as well. Many scientists who work in the life or physical sciences have stories of seeing a clear night sky or a dinosaur in a museum for the first time and feeling that spark of wonder and curiosity that can drive a career in science. The "Eureka!" moment in a scientific discovery can be as jubilant and profound as any religious experience. And for those scientists who are also people of faith, the wonder that they find in their work is shared with their understanding of the source of wonder in the universe, what we Christians call God.

Even for those who are unchurched or not a part of a religious community, wonder plays a role in their spirituality. Instead of gathering with others to sing hymns and offer prayers on a Sunday morning, they might go on a hike, searching out the beauty of a hidden waterfall or the peace that you can only find deep in the woods. They can stand at the edge of the ocean and wonder at the vastness of it, or find themselves intrigued by the pattern of a spider's web. There seems to be a base spirituality shared amongst all humans, and wonder is at the root of it.

Now, this can show up in all sorts of interesting ways. Anyone or thing that gains a cult following has benefitted from a human predisposition toward wonder. Superstition often builds on our wonderings and imaginings about things we don't fully understand. But when we turn our wonder toward God, when we seek out not nature but the Creator of it, we deepen our faith and connection to God and, consequently, our connection to each other.

In the coming months, I'll be offering a study on science, religion, and spirituality where we can explore all of these ideas and how they relate to our Christian journeys. I hope you'll be able to join me as we delve into wonder and all it has to offer!

DISCIPLE BIBLE STUDY

As followers of Jesus Christ, how well do we know our Holy Scriptures? Disciple Bible Study offers us an opportunity to know them better. This is a 34 week study in which biblical passages are read daily with weekly study sessions. During these sessions, a video is presented by a biblical scholar and the group discusses the week's readings. If you are interested, see Rev. Sue. Graduates of Disciple are invited to read through the Bible again. You may discover something different.

Time: Sat., Sept. 15, 2018 10:00 A.M.

A TIME FOR CHILDREN

Playing with a beach ball in church? What is going on? Rev. Sue demonstrated how God's mercy flows from God to us like a beach ball that goes up and down. And how we are to then show mercy to each other like a beach ball that is passed back and forth. Based on the Beatitude, "Blessed are the merciful, for they shall receive mercy" (Matthew 5:7).

WORSHIP ON THE LAWN

On Sunday, August 29 at the 10:00 worship service, we moved our worship outdoors to both share our faith with our community and experience God's beauty.
